

Evan Rosato
10/15/2024

Website title: Heilioantivirus.com
Company title: Heilio

Logo:

Home Page Introduction: Probably include some sort of slogan underneath their logo. “Shining a light on cybersecurity” or something. Then some sort of hook to get you interested in their product. Something joke-y “Do you feel safe on the web? You shouldn’t. Everyday, millions of people are targeted with malicious attacks over the internet. Don’t end up like one of those idiots, use Heilio™!”

About Page: Brief history of the company and its ‘accomplishments.’ Then an overview of what it’s doing in the modern day. Current products, business partners, etc.

Memorial: Small section, either near the very bottom (near the conclusion) or very top of the page (Before the introduction), mourning the death of their founder, Percy Johnson (P.J.) Splagutowitz. 1897-2024. Underneath his photo, it reads “No, we don’t know how he lived so long either. Please stop asking.”

“Research:” -Fake Article describing the recent A.I. Virus hack, that’s had a total of at least 50,000 confirmed victims and has yet to be put under control. It uses model learning for advanced Phishing scams on several different platforms like Steam, Discord, Facebook, Twitter, and even other websites (hint hint.) It presents you with some sort of disguised link or file, hoping the user will click on it or download and run it. Once the user does, it...

-Article about just how fucking awesome Heilio is as a company. Maybe some sort of “Top 10 sickest Antivirus softwares” thing with Heilio as #1.

-Article about something important about the company, but before you can actually read it, a fake popup appears saying that the article is behind a paywall and you need to pay to read it. (You can't actually pay to read it dw)

Images:  < Image of Heilio Founder for Memorial.
Source is here

Spray Bottle used for the Promotional image for Heilio
Antivirus.
Source is here

Image to show just how motherfucking happy everyone totally is at this company. Will be put in the body, inside the “About” page.

Source is here

Videos: Not sure if this counts but I'd like to make some sort of secret link or puzzle that brings you to this video: Jamiroquai - Virtual Insanity \(Official Video\) The video itself would not be featured in any part of the project.

Membership: You can sign up to get emails from Heilio regarding new products or other opportunities to waste your time and money on. All you need to do is give them your name, email, phone number, address, Social Security Number, Credit Card details, Blood Type, Eye Color, T-Cell Count, Sexual history, and the same information for at least 2 adjacent generations of your family.

Product: Heilio sells Antivirus software. Kills 99.9% of computer viruses. Costs $84, or 84 monthly payments of $1. Also comes in a Citrus scent for an extra 50 cents.

Conclusion: Short mission statement from the company, followed by reiterating their slogan. “We’re doing our part to create a better internet. Are you? Well? Are you, fucker? Are you doing your part, you lazy fucking bastard?

Heilio™”

Followed by fake copyright info and stuff.

Virus Fight: By snooping around the website, and solving a couple puzzles, you will eventually be able to find the virus mentioned in the first article. I’m not going to elaborate on it here for several reasons.

A: It's technically not required from the assignment details.

B: I like keeping things a mystery.

C: I plan stuff like this as it goes along, and to be blunt, if I were to write it here, the general fact that I'm doing it for an assignment would create way too much stress for me to give this my all.